THE TASTE OF GOLD:

Tightrope claims more national wine honours

Naramata, BC (August 7, 2019) – Tightrope Winery has picked up where it left off in 2018, winning a total of twelve medals at the annual WineAlign National Wine Awards. Blind judging was held in June in Prince Edward County, Ontario.

Taking gold were the 2018 Sauvignon Blanc Semillon Thomas Vineyard, of which judge Michael Godel writes, “may just be one of closest Bordeaux ringers made anywhere in Canada”; and the 2017 Chardonnay, which judge Bruce Wallner describes as “tangerine and peach followed by sourdough bread and riverstone”.

Silvers went to the 2018 Pinot Gris and the 2017 Vertigo. Bronze medals were awarded to the 2016 and 2017 Pinots Noirs, 2017 Syrah, 2018 Rosé, 2016 Equipoise, 2018 Tip-Toe, 2018 Riesling and 2017 Viognier.

As well, Tightrope was rated #10 Small Winery in Canada and #25 on the list of Top Wineries in Canada.

These latest accolades come as Tightrope releases its latest wines from the 2018 vintage: the award-winning Sauvignon Blanc, Pinot Gris, Rosé, Tip-Toe and Riesling.

The WineAlign National Awards come on top of 2018’s amazing success in competitions, in which Tightrope earned 42 medals in five competitions, and received Honourable Mention for Winery of the Year at the Intervin International Wine Awards.

This year, the prestige is even greater, as in May, the Naramata Bench, the benchland region between Penticton Creek and Okanagan Mountain Park, on the east side of Okanagan Lake, was granted sub-appellation status, meeting the requirements of the Wines of Marked Quality Regulation.

“Since its inception, Tightrope Winery has focused on making wine from grapes grown on the Naramata Bench,” says Lyndsay O’Rourke, Tightrope vintner, who owns the winery along with husband and viticulturist Graham. “Now, with the recognition of the Naramata Bench as a sub-GI (sub-Geographical Indication, or sub-appellation), we can finally put that on the bottle. It’s a very exciting time for us.”

It is now six years since Lyndsay and Graham O’Rourke struck out on their own and developed Tightrope Winery. The couple are not just owners, but are hands-on producers, formally educated in viticulture and oenology. They studied first at Okanagan

University College (now part of the University of British Columbia) and then at Lincoln University in New Zealand. Now, Graham works the land as the viticulturist, producing the grapes Lyndsay needs as vintner.

Tightrope wines are available in private liquor stores around British Columbia, or shipped direct via the Walk the Wire Wine Club.

BACKGROUNDER – August 2019

THE TIGHTROPE WINERY: It's all about balance

Tightrope Winery burst out of the gate with its very first vintage, winning six medals in three competitions, including a double gold for its 2012 Rosé at the Northwest Wine Summit. Since then, its wines have been honored internationally, winning a total of 42 medals in international competitions in 2018 and achieving Honourable Mention for Winery of the Year at the Intervin International Awards. 2019 has kicked off with another twelve medals – including two gold – at the WineAlign National Awards in 2019.

What makes this perennial success all the more remarkable, is the passion of co-owners Lyndsay and Graham O'Rourke. They are formally educated in the science and art of wine: they studied viticulture and oenology at Okanagan University College (as it then was), in the heart of BC's famous wine-growing country. They continued their studies at Lincoln University in New Zealand, which is internationally recognized for its Viticulture and Oenology program. Lyndsay was top of her class among the women in the Bachelor program and had the highest mark in the Wine Chemistry final.

The couple have had to overcome numerous challenges to get to where they are: they returned to the Okanagan as newcomers in a small industry; natural conditions changing year by year, requiring constant adaptation; and it's rare to find a woman vintner in the wine industry. It took people who were willing to give them a shot – like Prudence Merher at Ruby Blues, who took Lyndsay on as vintner and John Simes at Mission Hill, who hired Graham as a viticulturist. As they honed their crafts, they planted their own ten-acre vineyard in 2007 on the rolling hills of the Naramata Bench, overlooking Okanagan Lake in British Columbia. The Bench's complex soil and many micro-climates make for perfect conditions to grow a wide variety of grapes.

At first, they sold their grapes to other vineyards, then in 2012, they produced their first vintage – and that was the award-winning Rosé. In 2014, they turned Tightrope into their full-time project. This is their life, their passion -- not a hobby or side-hustle in retirement – and their gift is to share incredible wines with others.

With their formal education in viticulture and oenology, they understand the science behind growing wine grapes and making wine. Out of the science comes the art: making wine simply, with minimal intervention.

Graham makes sure Lyndsay has the grapes that she needs. Wine, he'll remind you, is made in the vineyard, and he ensures the grapes have the right sugar content and acidity to become the award-winning Riesling ("Best of Class" at the Cascadia Wine Competition, 2016 and 2018), Pinot Gris, Pinot Noir, Syrah, Rosé and all the other varieties that make Tightrope a Label To Know for wine lovers.

Another key ingredient in Tightrope Winery's recipe for success is sustainability. Graham sat on the committee writing guidelines for the vineyard portion of the Sustainable Winegrowing BC program, developed by the BC Wine Grape Council. A solar panel electrical system has recently been installed at the winery by Powermax Electric and Solar of Penticton. The 50-panel array can develop 17.25kw. As well, the winery is lit by LED lights to reduce energy consumption and has also invested in an under-vine mower, to eliminate the use of herbicides.

Tightrope wines can be found in private liquor stores around British Columbia; or visit the shop at the Winery, 1050 Fleet Road in Penticton (Naramata). The wine shop is open April through Thanksgiving (second Monday of October). Wine lovers can also join the Walk the Wire Wine Club, and order a dozen bottles of hand-selected whites, reds or an assortment, to be delivered twice a year to their door. Club perks also include preferred access to exclusive, new and limited-production wines.

Every year is an exercise in walking the tightrope. "We start with the wine we want to make," Lyndsay says, "and to get it to that end point, the other end of the tightrope, you have to balance all the variables along the way. These variables can include the weather, crop load, picking dates, winemaking decisions, business and financial hurdles, and, of course, the most exceptional grapes. We currently make 4500 cases of wine per year and we want each bottle to be memorable."

The science. The art. The sacrifice. The earth. The tannins. The minerality. There's a bit of Graham and Lyndsay in every bottle of Tightrope, and you can taste it.
